Vol. 28 EAST JORDAN, MICHIGAN, FRIDAY, APRIL 4, 1924. No. 14

Your City's Business

Believing that the citizens of East Jordan would be interested in the business and financial condition of the City, I wish to submit the following report of conditions and improvements during the last two years.

At the beginning of the present administration in 1922 the city's indebtedness in short term loans at the banks was $24500.00. This means that previous administrations had exceeded the city's income to that amount. The total bonded indebtedness at that time was $17824.00. During the years 1922 and 1923 this bonded indebtedness has been reduced $10,000.00 together with interest. All of the paving bonds are paid. The only remaining bonded indebtedness is $7824.00 of water works bonds which fall due $2000.00 annually. The short term indebtness at the banks has been reduced from $24500.00 to $7000.00.

In these two years the following street work has been done. Gravel roads have been built on Echo Street, 2 blocks; John Street, 1 block; continuation of Echo Street from Gidley's corner to the railroad; Spring Street, 2 blocks; State Street from Maple to the city limits; on Lake Street one-half mile to connect with the county road and Garfield Street hill curb, gutter and gravelled. Besides the ordinary repairing to the streets the gravelled roads were surfaced with road oil.

A complete new system of wells has been driven at the water works. This was necessary due to the filling up of the old wells.

The boulevard lighting system has been established on 5 blocks of Main Street and on 2½ blocks of State Street. The total cost of this improvement was $9690.40, of which the city paid one-half or $4845.20. In return for this investment the city owns all of the cable, posts and lighting fixtures in this area. The cost of these alone was in excess of $7000.00

Owing to the city obtaining a new rating from the Light Company it saved on the cost of the street lighting and pumping $2986.87 during the first year of the new rates. The second year cannot be given yet as it will not be up until September, but the saving will be approximately the same.

During the ensuing year it is contemplated by the present administration to widen Main Street for two blocks in the business section to relieve the traffic congestion. Bids have been asked for and the total estimated cost of this is around $4600.00. No contracts have yet been closed for this and will not be until the Council determines what a fair cost for this work should be.

With all the improvements and the reduction of the city's indebtedness, the tax rate has not been changed during the past five year.

Mayor

EAST JORDAN HIGH SCHOOL SCHOLARSHIPS

These Scholarships Are Already Producing Results.

RULES GOVERNING SAME

One of the finest things ever done for the East Jordan Public Schools was the presentation by W. P. Porter of an Annual Scholarship, to the two students who rank first and second in all-around scholarship and worth.

As was said in these columns some time before, the student with the highest standing, everything else being equal, gets a hundred dollars to assist him in entering college. The student with the second highest standing gets fifty dollars to assist him in entering a higher institution of learning.

The general rules of the scholarship were announced sometime in November and in a great many ways it has shown results, in statements from parents, some of them far out in the country, inquiring whether or not their children are eligible, and then to find from different teachers that even as far down as the seventh grade they are preparing themselves for High School in such a way that they may win not only the hundred dollars but the distinct honor of being awarded the scholarship. Few schools have a finer incentive.

The Valedictorian and Salutatorian do not necessarily win these scholarships. It is the students who have the highest standings at Commencement time, at the end of the four year course, for you perhaps understand that the valedictory and salutatory and other honors are figured up at the middle of the last year, making it still possible for a student to surpass them in their marks and win the scholarship.

The committee very nicely arranged the rules so that the students would be busy until the last part of the last year.

Then you will notice that it is just as important for the ninth, tenth and eleventh grades to keep their marks as high as possible, in order to be in the race for the scholarship. Therefore, affecting the largest possible number of students. This is an ideal for a great many students to struggle for. The marks and awards will be looked after by the following committee: the Cashiers of the two local Banks, Supt. and Principal of the High School, and a fifth member to be chosen by these four members. It is arranged so that no partiality will be shown, Mr. Porter himself having nothing to do with it after he has set the machinery in motion.

The conditions of the scholarships are named below:

Scholarships.

These scholarships shall be known as the East Jordan High School Scholarships.

The purpose of these scholarships shall be to:

1. Raise the scholastic standard.
2. To encourage ambitious and worthy students to attend higher institutions of learning, to develop character and a purpose to do something in the world.

Number and amount:

1. A scholarship of One Hundred Dollars.
2. A scholarship of Fifty Dollars.

Time of presentation:

The scholarships are to be awarded the night of Commencement, to the two most all-around students. (An all-around student shall be defined as one of good character, with a high purpose in life, and the highest scholastic standing.)

These scholarships shall be paid in two installments, one half upon matriculation at chosen school, and the balance upon the beginning of the second term.

An acceptance of this scholarship must be made within fifteen months after graduation.

In case the first scholarship is awarded to some student who fails to accept it in the allotted time, fifty dollars of it shall be awarded to the winner of the second scholarship and the remaining fifty dollars shall be awarded to a third honor student.

No student shall be allowed to compete for these scholarships unless they have been in regular attendance in this school during the entire time of their Junior and Senior years.

The winners of these scholarships shall be chosen by a committee of five persons, consisting of the following people, the Supt. of Schools, the Cashiers from each of the two local banks, the High School Principal, and a fifth member to be chosen by these four members.

To The Voters Of East Jordan

In asking your support for the office of Mayor at the election next Monday I think you are entitled to a statement from me.

I propose a sane business administration in full co-operation with the six other members of the council for the best interests of our city.

If elected, I will work with the council to secure all improvements desired by the people. The only way to do this without further increasing the city debt is to cut out useless expense.

Regarding the numerous wild rumors now afloat, I have made no promises as to appointive offices but if elected will make any such appointments only after full discussion with the council. As to the senseless talk of reviving the Old Blue Laws etc. I can only state again that I do not believe in a one man gov't and will not attempt it but will co-operate with the other members of our able council and to the fullest extent.

I respectfully request your support at the polls next Monday, April 7th.

HOWARD PORTER

AURA McBRIDE WINS CLASS HONORS

Eleven Honor Students in Senior Class.

In figuring the standings for the Senior class of the East Jordan High School, it was found that Miss Aura McBride has secured the highest, with an average of 96.83 per cent. Miss Annie Colden came second with an average of 95.30 per cent, and Jasper Stallard third with a 94.94 per cent average. There were eleven students with an average of 90 per cent or better.

The East Jordan High School is producing some very fine students. This does not necessarily mean that the teachers are responsible, but that the students are realizing that they are living in an age of great competition and are therefore, making a greater effort.

The East Jordan Public Schools do not aim to develop honor students, but instead they aim to develop competent capable people, who are able to be leaders of the right sort. We feel that these young people are the right sort, for they are making the right kind of a start.

SOUTH ARM TWP. VOTERS TAKE NOTICE.

NURSE FROM STATE DEP'T. OF HEALTH TO BE HERE.

Miss Leila Priest of the State Department of Health will be in East Jordan on April 7th and 8th, to give instructions to school girls in infant care during school hours. This has been made possible by the splendid co-operation of the Superintendent of Public Schools A. J. Duncanson and Father D. M. Drinan of the Parochial School. On the evening of April 9th at 7:30 a talk will be given on prenatal and infant care. All women are invited to attend.

Miss Priest will be in East Jordan every Monday and Wednesday for six weeks. This is part of the Sheppard-Towner program being carried on by the State Department of Health.

COMING TO THE TEMPLE!

PERCY MARMONT as MARK SABRE and MARGARET FIELDING as MABEL in "IF WINTER COMES" A WILLIAM FOX Special Production

"IF WINTER COMES" FILM IS BOOKED BY TEMPLE

Fox Photoplay Said to Be Faithful Reproduction of Famous Hutchinson Novel.

An important booking announced by the Temple Theatre is the William Fox screen version of A. S. M. Hutchinson's famous story, "If Winter Comes." This widely read novel has been faithfully picturized under the direction of Harry Millarde, the man who made "Over the Hill" and "The Town That Forgot God." Percy Marmont as Mark Sabre and Ann Forrest as Lady Tybar head the cast. A year was spent in filming the picturesque scenes of English life, the exteriors being taken in the actual localities mentioned in the book.

One of the most sympathetically portrayed characters is Hapgood, the boyhood friend of Mark Sabre's, who gives such a thorough insight into the thoughts and feelings of "Puzzlehead" Mark. The part is finely played by Arthur Metcalf, an actor of unusual ability and long experience. Coming Thursday and Friday, April 10-11th.

CONGRESSMAN IN GRAND JURY TOILS

LANGLEY, OF KENTUCKY, WITH FIVE OTHERS INDICTED FOR LIQUOR FRAUDS

DRY AGENTS ALSO INVOLVED

Charged With Conspiracy To Pay $100,000 for Withdrawal of Whisky from Warehouse.

Washington—Rep. John W. Langley (Rep.), Kentucky, and five others, including Millard F. West, former deputy commissioner of internal revenue face grand jury indictments charging conspiracy to interfere with the operation of the Government in liquor withdrawals.

Langley, who is chairman of the House Public Buildings and Grounds Committee, is serving his ninth term in Congress.

Those indicted with Langley and West were Russell M. Sackett, a prohibition agent in Pennsylvania, Ben L. Moses and Harry Sattler, co-partners trading as the Union Drug Co., and Sidney Reis, described as a procurer of liquors in large quantities.

They were charged with conspiring to pay $100,000 to Mortimer and Herman Beltzeiler and Donald J. Delancey—who also were named as implicated, but were not indicted because they gave testimony—to bring about the purchase, withdrawal and transportation of whisky from a distillery warehouse to the Union Drug Co.

It was charged that $5,000 of the amount was to have been paid Langley for inducing Kramer, West, Sackett and Arthur McKean, who at the time was prohibition agent at Pittsburgh, to "connive" at the removal and transportation of the liquor.

Four overt acts, beginning in April 1921, were set forth.

The conspiracy section of the Criminal Code prescribes punishment of not more than two years imprisonment, or a fine of not more than $10,000, or both.

In returning two indictments here in one of which Langley was named alone, and in the other jointly with all of the accused—the Federal grand jury also named John F. Kramer, former prohibition commissioner, and Elias H. Mortimer, star witness before the Chicago grand jury which investigated Veterans' Bureau fraud charges, as being involved in the alleged conspiracy. They were not indicted, however, because they went before the grand jury as witnesses.

CONVENTION HISTORY RE-TOLD

Al Jennings Testifies Politician Paid $1,000,000 for G. O. P. Choice.

Washington—Al Jennings, the former train robber, outlaw and slayer, now an evangelist, told the Senate committee investigating the oil scandal that Jake Hamon had informed him, in Chicago, in 1920, that Warren G. Harding was to be nominated as Republican candidate for President, and that it had cost Hamon $1,000,000.

Of this sum, $250,000 went to the late Senator Boles Penrose of Pennsylvania, Jennings said he was told by Hamon, who then was Republican national committeeman for Oklahoma.

Jennings quoted Hamon as saying that Harry M. Daugherty and Will H. Hayes each were given $25,000.

Washington—An inquiry into Democratic campaign funds is being made by the Senate oil committee on motion of Senator Selden R. Spencer (Rep.), Missouri.

Subpenas were issued for George White, former chairman of the Democratic National Committee; Wilbur Marsh, its former treasurer, and E. L. Doheny, said to have contributed to the 1920 campaign fund.

Turpentine, paints oils and gasoline made it impossible to stop the blaze. The heat became so intense that buildings across the street were scorched and displays caught fire.

Windows for two blocks on either side of the fire and on the opposite side of the street were broken.

STUDEBAKER LIGHT-SIX TOURING CAR

Mark This Example

of what Studebaker alone can do

STUDEBAKER is the world's largest maker of quality cars. Our assets are $90,000,000. We have $50,000,000 in model plants.

Our sales have almost trebled in three years, because of our matchless values. Last year, 145,167 people paid $201,000,000 for Studebaker cars.

Come and learn why

Come and see, before you buy a car, the reasons for this success. See this Light-Six Touring Car, for instance.

Built of the finest steels. Of the very same steels we use in the costliest of our cars. On some we pay makers 15% premium to get just the quality specified.

Built under an engineering department which costs us $500,000 yearly.

Each car subjected in the building to 32,000 separate inspections.

Same steels, same workmanship as in the costliest Studebaker models.

Two great features

There are many features in this Light-Six found in no rival car. But we want to mention two in particular.

The motor is perfectly balanced. That means long life and freedom from vibration.

The reason is this: We machine all surfaces of our crankshafts and connecting rods by 61 operations. Just as was done in Liberty Airplane Motors. This is done in no other car at our prices.

Then we use more Timken bearings in this car than are used in any competitive car within $1,500 of our price. And Timken bearings take up wear as no other bearings do.

Why this price?

This Light-Six Touring Car is priced at $1,045. Built under ordinary conditions such a car would cost you from $200 to $400 more.

But we build 150,000 cars per year. We make our own parts. We build our own bodies in $10,000,000 body plants. We have 12,500 up-to-date machines. Our major costs are divided by enormous output.

The result is a value no other maker even tries to match in a fine car of this size. Come see what it means to you.

Ann Arbor—Coming to this city from Johannesburg, South Africa, to see one's son graduate from the University of Michigan, is a long and expensive trip, yet that is what the mother of Montague Leveson, a member of the graduating class of the dental college, has planned to do Mrs. Leveson at present is in England and hopes to arrive in this country shortly where she will remain until after commencement. Leveson is chairman of the invitation committee of the senior dental class.

Agreement to this plan has been obtained from John Baird of the state conservation department, the club announced. An effort is to be made to get a carload of large bass to be planted in the lakes here also.

Lansing—Stocks of corn and oats on farms in Michigan are less than one year ago but the supply of wheat held is more according to the crop report issued by L. "I knew nothing," he said, "except this. They were neither of them young men of much stomach, and I knew that the one who was the greater coward would probably try to anticipate the matter by attacking the other first if he could. I knew that Fairfax was the greater coward—not that there was much to choose between them—and I also knew that he was the injured person. That is really all there is about it. My somewhat theatrical statement to you was based upon probability, and not upon any certain foreknowledge. As you see, it came off."

"And the cause of their quarrel?" Francis asked.

"There might have been a hundred reasons," Sir Timothy observed. "As a matter of fact, it was the eternal one. There is no need to mention a woman's name, so we will let it go at that."

There was a moment's silence—a strange, unforgettable moment for Francis Ledsam, who seemed by some curious trick of the imagination to have been carried away into an impossible and grotesque world. The hum of eager conversation, the popping of corks, the little trills of feminine laughter, all blended into one sensual and unmusical chorus, seemed to fade from his ears. He fancied himself in some subterranean place of vast dimensions, through the grim galleries of which men and women with evil faces crept like animals. And towering above them, unreal in size, his scornful face an epitome of sin, the knout which he wielded symbolical and ghastly, driving his motley flock with the leer of the evil shepherd, was the man from whom he had already learned to recoil with horror. The picture came and went in a flash. Francis found himself accepting a courteously offered cigar from his companion.

"You see, the story is very much like many others," Sir Timothy murmured, as he lit a fresh cigar himself and leaned back with the obvious enjoyment of the cultivated smoker. "In every country of the world, the animal world as well as the human world, the male resents his female being taken from him. Directly he ceases to resent it, he becomes degenerate. Surely you must agree with me, Mr. Ledsam?"

"It comes to this, then," Francis pronounced deliberately, "that you stage-managed the whole affair."

Sir Timothy smiled.

"It is my belief, Mr. Ledsam," he said, "that you grow more and more intelligent every hour."

Sir Timothy glanced presently at his thin gold watch and put it back in his pocket regretfully.

"Alas!" he sighed, "I fear that I must tear myself away. I particularly want to hear the last act of 'Louise.' The new Frenchwoman sings, and my daughter is alone. You will excuse me."

Francis nodded silently. His companion's careless words brought a sudden dazzling vision into his mind. Sir Timothy scrawled his name at the foot of his bill.

"It is one of my axioms in life, Mr. Ledsam," he continued, "that there is more pleasure to be derived from the society of one's enemies than one's friends. If I thought you sufficiently educated in the outside ways of the world to appreciate this, I would ask if you cared to accompany me?"

Francis did not hesitate for a moment.

"Sir Timothy," he said, "I have the greatest detestation for you, and I am firmly convinced that you represent all the things in life abhorrent to me. On the other hand, I should very much like to hear the last act of 'Louise,' and it would give me the greatest pleasure to meet your daughter. So long as there is no misunderstanding—"

Sir Timothy laughed.

"Come," he said, "we will get our hats. I am becoming more and more grateful to you, Mr. Ledsam. You are supplying something in my life which I have lacked. You appeal alike to my sense of humor and my imagination. We will visit the opera together."

CHAPTER IX

The two men left Soto's together, very much in the fashion of two ordinary acquaintances sallying out to spend the evening together. Sir Timothy's Rolls-Royce limousine was in attendance, and in a few minutes they were threading the purlieus of Covent Garden. It was here that an incident occurred which afforded Francis considerable food for thought during the next few days.

It was a Friday night, and one or two wagons laden with vegetable produce were already threading their way through the difficult thoroughfares. Suddenly Sir Timothy, who was standing up at the window, pressed the button of the car, which was at once brought to a standstill. Before the footman could reach the door Sir Timothy was out in the street. For the first time Francis saw him angry. His eyes were blazing, his voice—Francis had followed him at once into the street—shook with passion. His hand had fallen heavily upon the shoulder of a huge carter, who, with whip in hand, was belaboring a thin scarecrow of a horse.

"What the devil are you doing?" Sir Timothy demanded.

The man stared at his questioner, and the instinctive antagonism of race vibrated in his truculent reply. The carter was a beery-faced, untidy-looking brute, but powerfully built and with huge shoulders. Sir Timothy, straight as a dart, without overcoat or any covering to his thin evening clothes, looked like a stripling in front of him.

"I'm whippin' 'er, if yer want to know," was the carter's reply. "I've got to get up the 'ill, 'aven't I? Garn and mind yer own business!"

"This is my business," Sir Timothy declared, laying his hand upon the neck of the horse. "I am an official of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. You are laying yourself open to a fine for your treatment of this poor brute."

"I'll lay myself open for a fine for the treatment of something else, if you don't quid 'old of my 'oss," the carter retorted, throwing his whip back into the wagon and coming a step nearer. "D'yer 'ear? I don't want any swells interferin' with my business. You 'op it. Is that strite enough? 'Op it, quick!"

Sir Timothy's anger seemed to have abated. There was even the beginning of a smile upon his lips. All the time his hand caressed the neck of the horse. Francis noticed with amazement that the poor brute had raised its head and seemed to be making some faint effort at reciprocation.

"My good man," Sir Timothy said, "you seem to be one of those brutal persons unfit to be trusted with an animal. However—"

The carter had heard quite enough. Sir Timothy's tone seemed to madden him. He clenched his fist and rushed in.

"You take that for interferin', you big toff!" he shouted.

The result of the man's effort at pugilism was almost ridiculous. His arms appeared to go round like windmills beating the air. It really seemed as though he had rushed upon the point of Sir Timothy's knuckles, which had suddenly shot out like the piston of an engine. The carter lay on his back for a moment. Then he staggered viciously to his feet.

"Don't," Sir Timothy begged, as he saw signs of another attack. "I don't want to hurt you. I have been amateur champion of two countries. Not quite fair, is it?"

"Wot d'yer want to come interferin' with a chap's business for?" the man

"You 'Op It—Is That Strite Enough? 'Op It, Quick!"

growled, dabbing his cheek with a filthy handkerchief but keeping at a respectful distance.

"It happens to be my business also," Sir Timothy replied, "to interfere whenever I see animals ill-treated. Now I don't want to be unreasonable. That animal has done all the work it ought to do in this world. How much is she worth to you?"

"That 'oss," he said, "ain't what she was, it's true, but there's a lot of work in 'er yet. She may not be much to look at but she's worth forty quid to me—ay, and one to spit on!"

Sir Timothy counted out some notes from the pocketbook which he had produced, and handed them to the man.

"Here are fifty pounds," he said. "The mare is mine."

He called over his footman and directed him to unharness the animal and take it to his private stable, in town.

The man touched his hat and hastened to commence his task. Sir Timothy turned to Francis. "We might walk the last few yards, Mr. Ledsam," he said.

The latter acquiesced at once, and in a moment or two they were in the opera house.

Margaret Hilditch, her chair pushed back into the recesses of the box, scarcely turned her head at her father's entrance.

"I have brought an acquaintance of yours, Margaret," the latter announced, in a tone of light indifference. "You remember Mr. Ledsam?"

Francis drew a little breath of relief as he bowed over her hand. For the second time her inordinate composure had been annulled. She was her usual calm and indifferent self almost immediately, but the gleam of surprise, and he fancied not unpleasant surprise, had been unmistakable.

"Are you a devotee, Mr. Ledsam?" she asked.

"I am fond of music," Francis answered, "especially this opera."

She motioned to the chair in the front of the box, facing the stage.

"You must sit there," she insisted. "I prefer always to remain here, and my father always likes to face the audience. I really believe," she went on, "that he likes to catch the eye of the journalist who writes little gossipy items, and to see his name in print."

"But you yourself?" Francis ventured.

"I fancy that my reasons for preferring seclusion should be obvious enough," she replied, a little bitterly.

"My daughter is inclined, I fear, to be a little morbid," Sir Timothy said, settling down in his place.

Francis made no reply. A triangular conversation of this sort was almost impossible. The members of the orchestra were already climbing up to their places, in preparation for the overture to the last act. Sir Timothy rose to his feet.

"You will excuse me for a moment," he begged. "I see a lady to whom I must pay my respects."

Francis drew a sigh of relief at his departure. He turned at once to his companion.

"Did you mind my coming?" he asked.

"Mind it?" she repeated, with almost insolent nonchalance. "Why should it affect me in any way? My father's friends come and go. I have no interest in any of them."

"But," he protested, "I want you to be interested in me."

She moved a little uneasily in her place. Her tone, nevertheless, remained icy.

"Could you possibly manage to avoid personalities in your conversation, Mr. Ledsam?" she begged. "I have tried already to tell you how I feel about such things."

She was certainly difficult. Francis realized that with a little sigh.

"Were you surprised to see me with your father?" he asked, a little inanely.

"I cannot conceive what you two have found in common," she admitted.

"Perhaps our interest in you," he replied. "By-the-bye, I have just seen him perform a quixotic but a very fine action," Francis said. "He stopped a carter from thrashing his horse, knocked him down, bought the horse from him and sent it home."

She was mildly interested.

"An amiable side of my father's character which no one would suspect," she remarked. "The entire park of his country house at Hatton End is given over to broken-down animals."

"I am one of those," he confessed, "who find this trait amazing."

"And I am another," she remarked coolly. "If any one settled down seriously to try and understand my father, he would need the spectacles of a De Quincey, the outlook of a Voltaire, and the callousness of a Borgia. You see, he doesn't lend himself to any of the recognized standards."

"Neither do you," he said boldly.

She looked away from him across the house, to where Sir Timothy was talking to a man and woman in one of the ground-floor boxes. Francis recognized them with some surprise—an agricultural duke and his daughter Lady Cynthia Milton, one of the most beautiful and famous young women in London.

"Your father goes far afield for his friends," Francis remarked.

"My father has no friends," she replied. "He has many acquaintances. I doubt whether he has a single confidant. I expect Cynthia is trying to persuade him to invite her to his next party at the Walled House."

"I should think she would fail, won't she?" he asked.

"Why should you think that?"

Francis shrugged his shoulders slightly.

"Your father's entertainments have the reputation of being somewhat unique," he remarked. "You do not, by-the-bye, attend them yourself."

"You must remember that I have had very few opportunities so far," she observed. "Besides, Cynthia has tastes which I do not share."

"As, for instance."

"She goes to the National Sporting club. She once traveled, I know, over a hundred miles to go to a bull fight."

"On the whole," Francis said, "I am glad that you do not share her tastes."

"You know her?" Margaret inquired.

"Indifferently well," Francis replied. "I knew her when she was a child, and we seem to come together every now and then at long intervals. As a debutante she was charming. Lately it seems to me that she has got into the wrong set."

"What do you call the wrong set?"

He hesitated for a moment.

"Please don't think I am laying down the law," he said. "I have been out so little, the last few years, that I ought not, perhaps, to criticise. Lady Cynthia, however, seems to me to belong to the extreme section of the younger generation, the section who have a sort of craze for the unusual, whose taste in art and living is distorted and bizarre. You know what I mean, don't you—black drawing-rooms, futurist wall-papers, opium dens and a cocaine box! It's to some

Reliable Transport

During almost every winter there comes to Michigan at least one period in which all inter-city transportation fails, except that furnished by the State's 24 steam Railroads. Such a period followed the snowfall of February 19, 1924.

During that period, traffic was suspended on even the most extensively traveled trunk highways. Automobiles, trucks and buses either remained indoors or were deserted and left in the drifts, awaiting aid from the highway authorities.

Yet, throughout this entire period, no community in Michigan suffered for food or fuel. For the railroad trains moved, carrying the freight and passengers entrusted to their care. Railroad men fought day and night against the storms, that this service might be provided.

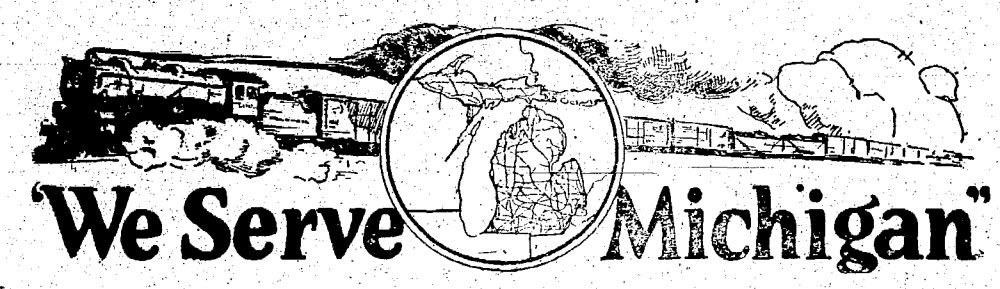

The railroads consider it a compliment that Michigan always expects good railroad service, even complaining occasionally, if mid-winter trains vary from fair-weather schedules.

The expenses of this service under storm conditions are always excessive—and the state pays no part of the bill as it does for highway snow clearing. Railroad men incur the hardships and railroad capital pays the bill.

Will you recall, next July, that the Railroads hauled in your winter food and fuel despite 6 foot snowdrifts which shut off other means of transportation? Courage and railroad earnings did this—not your tax money.

Meaning of Adirondacks.

The word "Adirondacks" is an Indian word, meaning "wood-eaters," a derisive term given a defeated Indian tribe who were driven to the mountains by the victorious Iroquois and forced to live there on berries and bark.

Careless Expressman.

A fellow sent a package of books up to his country home last week, and if the expressman had handled it with care, as directed, it would never have sprung a leak.

Why Babies Cry.

Babies never cry because they enjoy it, says a wise mother. Discomfort either from lack of care or from illness is the real reason. A pretty good guide for baby care is to regard infants as real human beings with an all-round capacity a little less in volume than an adult.

Married Women Bob Hair.

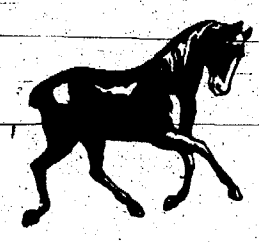

In New Guinea the single young woman lets her hair hang about her shoulders in all its glory, but immediately after marriage she must have it "bobbed."

Betsy Ross.

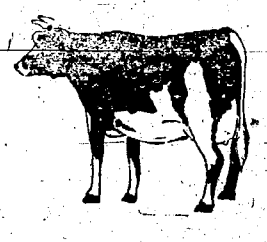

Elizabeth Griscom (Betsy Ross) was a daughter of Samuel and Rebecca (James) Griscom. She was born January 1, 1752, at Philadelphia, Pa. Her parents were Quakers. Betsy was the seventh daughter. In consequence of her marrying an Episcopalian she was disowned by the Friends. In 1777 she made the national flag.

Don't Overdo Politeness.

Those who make an art of being polite are in danger of growing into a habit of too much finesse. Overdone politeness is icy.

James Arnott of Bunker Hill, north side received a letter Monday bringing the news of the birth of a little daughter to Mr. and Mrs. Geo. McMillen, nee Thelma Uptogrove, at their home in Muskegon. The little lady makes Mr. Arnott great grand daddy. She is named Margarite Juanita.

Over fifty per cent. of the school children have some form of Spinal defect which renders the child sub-normal and places over him a handicap which is unfair and unjust. Not merely that alone, it renders him unfit to adapt himself to his life conditions to the best advantage to himself and others. In almost every instance a few Chiropractic Adjustments would completely and permanently remove this handicap and give him a fair chance in the race for life and success.

"THE EVIL SHEPHERD"

extent execration, of course, but it's a folly that claims its victims."

He studied him for a moment attentively. His leanness was the leanness of muscular strength and condition, his face was full of vigor and determination.

"You at least have escaped the abnormal," she remarked. "I am not quite sure how the entertainments at the Walled House would appeal to you, but if my father should invite you there, I should advise you not to go."

"Why not?" he asked.

She hesitated for a moment.

"I really don't know why I should trouble to give you advice," she said. "As a matter of fact, I don't care whether you go or not. In any case, you are scarcely likely to be asked."

"I am not sure that I agree with you," he protested. "Your father seems to have taken quite a fancy to me."

"And you?" she murmured.

"Well, I like the way he bought that horse," Francis admitted. "And I am beginning to realise that there may be something in the theory which he advanced when he invited me to accompany him here this evening—that there is a certain piquancy in one's intercourse with an enemy, which friendship lacks. There may be complexities in his character which as yet I have not appreciated."

The curtain had gone up and the last act of the opera had commenced. She leaned back in her chair. Without a word or even a gesture, he understood that a curtain had been let down between them. He obeyed her unspoken wish and relapsed into silence. Her very absorption, after all, was a hopeful sign. She would have him believe that she felt nothing, that she was living outside all the passion and sentiment of life. Yet she was absorbed in the music. . . . Sir Timothy came back and seated himself silently. It was not until the tumult of applause which broke out after the great song of the French ouvrier that a word passed between them.

Not another word was spoken until the curtain fell. Francis lingered for a moment over the arrangement of her cloak. Sir Timothy was already outside, talking to some acquaintances.

"It has been a great pleasure to see you like this unexpectedly," he said, a little wistfully.

"I cannot imagine why," she answered, with an undernote of trouble in her tone. "Remember the advice I gave you before. No good can come of any friendship between my father and you."

"There is this much of good in it, at any rate," he answered, as he held open the door for her. "It might give me the chance of seeing you sometimes."

"That is not a matter worth considering," she replied.

"I find it very much worth considering," he whispered, losing his head for a moment as they stood close together in the dim light of the box, and a sudden sense of the sweetness of her thrilled his pulses. "There isn't anything in the world I want so much as to see you oftener—to have my chance."

There was a momentary glow in her eyes. Her lips quivered. The few words which he saw framed there—he fancied of reproof—remained unspoken. Sir Timothy was waiting for them at the entrance.

"I have been asking Mrs. Hilditch's permission to call in Curzon street," Francis said boldly.

"I am sure my daughter will be delighted," was the cold but courteous reply.

Margaret herself made no comment. The car drew up and she stepped into it—a tall, slim figure, wonderfully graceful in her unrelieved black, her hair gleaming as though with some sort of burnish, as she passed underneath the electric light. She looked back at him with a smile of farewell as he stood bareheaded upon the steps, a smile which reminded him somehow of her father, a little sardonic, a little tender, having in it some faintly challenging quality. The car rolled away.

CHAPTER X

Francis Ledsam was himself again, the lightest-hearted and most popular member of his club, still a brilliant figure in the courts, although his appearances there were less frequent, still devoting the greater portion of his time to his profession, although his work in connection with it had become less spectacular. One morning, at the corner of Clarges street and Curzon street, about three weeks after his visit to the opera, he came face to face with Sir Timothy Brast.

"Will you dine with me at Hatch End tonight?" the latter asked. "My daughter and I will be alone."

"I should be delighted," Francis replied promptly. "I ought to tell you, perhaps, that I have called three times upon your daughter, but have not been fortunate enough to find her at home."

Sir Timothy was politely apologetic.

"I fear that my daughter is a little inclined to be morbid," he confessed. "Society is good for her. I will undertake that you are a welcome guest."

"At what time do I come and how shall I find your house?" Francis inquired.

"You motor down, I suppose?" Sir Timothy observed. "Good! In Hatch End anyone will direct you. We dine at eight. You had better come down [illegible] your dust. Bring a pyjama[illegible] the night."

"I shall be delighted," Francis replied.

"Do not," Sir Timothy continued, "court disappointment by overanticipation. You have without doubt heard of my little gatherings at Hatch End. They are viewed, I am told, with grave suspicion, alike by the moralists of the city and, I fear, the police. I am not inviting you to one of those gatherings. They are for people with other tastes. My daughter and I have been spending a few days alone in the little bungalow by the side of my larger house. That is where you will find us—The Sanctuary, we call it."

"Some day," Francis ventured, "I shall hope to be asked to one of your more notorious gatherings. For the present occasion I much prefer the entertainment you offer."

"Then we are both content," Sir Timothy said, smiling. "Au revoir!"

Francis walked across Green park, along the Mall, down Horse Guards Parade, along the Embankment to his rooms on the fringe of the Temple. Here he found his clerk awaiting his arrival in some disturbance of spirit.

"There is a young gentleman here to see you, sir," he announced. "Mr. Reginald Wilmore his name is, I think."

"Wilmore?" Francis repeated. "What have you done with him?"

"He is in your room, sir. He seems very impatient. He has been out two or three times to know how long I thought you would be."

Francis passed down the stone passage and entered his room, a large, shady apartment at the back of the building. To his surprise it was empty. He was on the point of calling to his clerk when he saw that the writing paper on his desk had been disturbed. He went over and read a few lines written in a boy's hasty writing:

"Dear Mr. Ledsam:

"I am in a very strange predicament and I have come to ask your advice. You know my brother Andrew well, and you may remember playing tennis with me last year. I am compelled—"

At that point the letter terminated abruptly. There was a blot and a smudge. The pen lay where it seemed to have rolled—on the floor. The ink was not yet dry. Francis called to his clerk.

"Angrave," he said, "Mr. Wilmore is not here."

The clerk looked around in obvious surprise.

"It isn't five minutes since he came out to my office, sir!" he exclaimed. "I heard him go back again afterward."

Francis shrugged his shoulders.

"Perhaps he decided not to wait and you didn't hear him go by."

Angrave shook his head.

"I do not see how he could have left the place without my hearing him, sir," he declared. "The door of my office has been open all the time, and I sit opposite to it. Besides, on these stone floors one can hear any one so distinctly."

"Then what," Francis asked, "has become of him?"

The clerk shook his head.

"I haven't any idea, sir," he confessed.

Francis plunged into his work and forgot all about the matter. He was reminded of it, however, at luncheon time, when, on entering the dining room of the club, he saw Andrew Wilmore seated alone at one of the small tables near the wall. He went over to him at once.

"Hullo, Andrew," he greeted him, "what are you doing here by yourself?"

"Bit hipped, old fellow," was the depressed reply. "Sit down, will you?"

Francis sat down and ordered his lunch.

"By-the-bye," he said, "I had rather a mysterious visit this morning from your brother Reggie."

Wilmore stared at him for a moment, half in relief, half in amazement.

"Good God, Francis, you don't say so!" he exclaimed. "How was he? What did he want? Tell me about it at once? We've been worried to death about the boy."

"Well, as a matter of fact, I didn't see him," Francis explained. "He arrived before I reached my rooms—as you know, I don't live there—waited some time, began to write this note," —drawing the sheet of paper from his pocket—"and when I got there had [illegible] without leaving a message or anything."

Wilmore snatched at the paper with trembling fingers. Then he read the few lines through.

"Francis," he said, when he had finished them, "do you know that this is the first word we've heard of him for three days?"

"Great heavens!" Francis exclaimed. "He was living with his mother, wasn't he?"

"Down at Kensington, but he hasn't been there since Monday," Andrew replied. "His mother is in a terrible state. And now this, I don't understand it at all."

"Was the boy hard up?"

"Not more than most young fellows are," was the puzzled reply. "His allowance was due in a few days, too. He had money in the bank, I feel sure. He was saving up for a motor car."

"Haven't I seen him once or twice at restaurants lately," Francis inquired. "Soto's, for instance?"

"Very likely," his brother assented. "Why not? He's fond of dancing, and we none of us ever encouraged him to be a stay-at-home."

"Any particular girl he was interested in?"

"Not that we know of. Like most young fellows of his age, he was rather keen on young women with some connection with the stage, but I don't believe there was any one in particular. Reggie was too fond of games to waste much time that way. He's at the gymnasium three evenings a week."

"I wish I'd been at the office a few minutes earlier this morning," Francis observed. "I tell you what, Andrew. I have some pals down at Scotland Yard, and I'll go down and see them this afternoon. They'll want a photograph, and to ask a few questions. I dare say, but I shouldn't talk about the matter too much."

"You're very kind, Francis," his friend replied, "but it isn't so easy to sit tight. I was going to the police myself this afternoon."

"Take my advice and leave it to me," Francis begged. "I have a particular pal down at Scotland Yard who I know will be interested, and I want him to take up the case."

"You haven't any theory, I suppose?" Wilmore asked, a little wistfully.

Francis shook his head.

"Not the ghost of one," he admitted. "The reason I am advising you to keep as quiet as possible, though, is just this. If you create a lot of interest in a disappearance, you have to satisfy the public curiosity when the mystery is solved."

"I see," Wilmore murmured. "All the same, I can't imagine Reggie getting mixed up in anything discreditable."

"Neither can I, from what I remember of the boy," Francis agreed. "Let me see, what was he doing in the city?"

"He was with Jameson & Scott, stock brokers," Wilmore replied. "He was only learning the business and he had no responsibilities. Curiously enough, though, when I went to see Mr. Jameson he pointed out one or two little matters that Reggie had attended to, which looked as though he were clearing up, somehow or other."

"He left no message there, I suppose?"

"Not a line or a word. He gave the porter five shillings, though, on the afternoon before he disappeared—a man who has done some odd jobs for him."

"Well, a voluntary disappearance is better than an involuntary one," Francis remarked. "What was his usual program when he left the office?"

"He either went to Queen's and played racquets, or he went straight to his gymnasium in the Holborn. I telephoned to Queen's. He didn't call there on the Wednesday night, anyhow."

"Where's the gymnasium?"

"At 147-A Holborn. A lot of city young men go there late in the evening, but Reggie got off earlier than most of them and used to have the place pretty much to himself. I think that's why he stuck to it."

Francis made a note of the address.

"I'll get Shopland to step down there some time," he said. "Or better still, finish your lunch and we'll take a taxi there ourselves. I'm going to the country later on, but I've half-an-hour to spare. We can go without our coffee and be there in ten minutes."

"A great idea," Wilmore acquiesced. "It's probably the last place Reggie visited, anyway."

However, inquiries at the gymnasium were fruitless, the manager becoming surly as soon as he learned the reason of their visit, and showing them the door in an abrupt manner.

Salts Fine for Aching Kidneys

When Back Hurts Flush Your Kidneys as You Clean Your Bowels

Most folks forget that the kidneys, like the bowels, sometimes get sluggish and clogged and need a flushing occasionally, else we have backache and dull misery in the kidney region, severe headaches, rheumatic twinges, torpid liver, acid stomach, sleeplessness and all sorts of bladder disorders.

You simply must keep your kidneys active and clean and the moment you feel an ache or pain in the kidney region begin drinking lots of water. Also get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any good drug store here, take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and is intended to flush clogged kidneys and help stimulate them to activity. It also helps neutralize the acids in the urine so they no longer irritate, thus helping to relieve bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; makes a delightful effervescent lithia water drink which everybody should take now and then to help keep their kidneys clean.

A well-known local druggist says he sells lots of Jad Salts to folks who believe in trying to correct kidney trouble while it is only trouble. By all means have your physician examine your kidneys at least twice a year.

Oat Smut Caused by Minute Plant

Enters Developing Kernels and Turns Them Into Powdery Masses.

Oat smut is caused by a very minute plant which lives parasitically within the tissues of the oat plant. It gains entrance in the seedling stage, about the time the plant is emerging from the soil. When once inside it grows upward through the tissues of the stem, giving little or no external evidence of its presence until the heads are produced. At this time it enters the developing kernels and destroys them by forming black powdery masses in their places.

Important Parasite.

The black powdery substance is found to be made of millions of small, spherical, dark bodies called "spores." Spores represent the reproductive phase of the parasite and are important in that they are the means by which the smut is spread. They are of very light weight and easily carried by air currents for long distances. They find lodgment upon, or underneath, the chaff of healthy grains and remain there until the grain is sown. Under favorable conditions the spores germinate soon after germination of the grain itself. They produce a tiny transparent infection thread which soon penetrates the young tissues of the growing seedling and thereafter keeps pace with the upward growth of the stalk.

Produce Dark Spores.

By the time the plants arrive at maturity the original infection threads have grown so extensively that they enter the developing kernels and produce the characteristic large masses of dark spores. This simple life cycle of the smut fungus is completed but once during the growing season, and, unless it is checked by means of effective seed treatment, may continue indefinitely in succeeding crops.—Extension Service, Colorado Agricultural College.

Top-Dressing Alfalfa Is Proper Thing for Spring

The practice of top-dressing alfalfa with manure during the winter is not recommended by the Ohio experiment station. It frequently results in injury to the stand and is not a sure preventive of winterkilling. Top dressing in the spring with a moderate application of acid phosphate is to be preferred.

If from very late cutting in the fall or other cause the stand is too thin in the spring for a good crop, a full harvest of hay may be secured by drilling in oats in March or early April with a disc drill, at the rate of three or four pecks per acre. The mixture of oats and alfalfa will make a hay of good quality.

If an early variety of oats, such as Fulghum, Sixty Day, Kherson, or Burt is sown, the mixture may be cut when the alfalfa is coming into bloom and will make a hay of good quality.

The second cutting will be almost pure alfalfa. A mixture of three pounds of timothy seed and two of alsike per acre may be seeded with the oats. This will gradually fill the spaces between the scattered alfalfa plants.

Breeding Cows and Sows Like Sweet Alfalfa Hay

The man who has some nice, sweet alfalfa hay stored away need not have much trouble with his breeding stock, if he will make liberal use of it. Cows fed on good legume hay will drop strong calves. Sows will farrow strong, vigorous litters if they are fed plenty of alfalfa and oats or barley, and sparingly of corn. Breeding cows or sows should not run with nor be fed with the fattening stock. Some breeders allow their sows to run with the general drove up to within two or three weeks of farrowing time. It's a mistake, and small litters with cross mothers are the outcome.

Alfalfa hay is a good conditioner, and it's a good bone builder; you can't find anything better, and the good, careful live stock feeder will see that his stock has plenty of it during the next two or three months.

Digging in Now to Help Digging Out in Summer

There are many things that a farmer can just as well do now as to wait till summer time is here. Putting the farm tools in shape is one of the first of these. Doing this work now gives us time to get repairs and to do the repairing as it should be done. Another is getting the manure out of the yards and onto the fields. Draw it out as fast as it accumulates. Thus handled the manure is of more value to the fields, keeps yards in better shape and next summer will be less of the fly nuisance about the premises. A third duty for the cold months is the putting of the fences in order. This will save much annoyance and waste of time by keeping the live stock in place.

Good as Rat Eradicator

One of the most effective of all rat eradicators is a combination of equal parts of cornmeal and plaster of paris applied in spoonful amounts in the fields and ditches, about the farm buildings, and in and around the burrows themselves. It is superior to poison bait and the safest combination to use on the farm.

Cause of Losses to Pea Canners

Seed of Right Variety Is One of Most Important Considerations.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

One of the most important considerations in the commercial growing of peas for canning is seed of the right variety, as a few plants of the wrong kind may ruin the entire pack, says the United States Department of Agriculture. The Alaska variety, which is the basis of a very large percentage of the acreage used for canning purposes, must be kept reasonably pure if the crop is to be grown at a profit, and no matter how good the seed is otherwise, if there is a small percentage of peas known as Bangalins, the crop will be undesirable for canning because of the discoloration produced by this variety.

Test Samples of Seed.

During the past two years the department has collected samples of seed of canning peas on the open market and grown them side by side in trial grounds; some surprising facts regarding the quality of the seed have been brought out. In 1923 the growing tests of Alaska peas comprised 219 samples, and of these 11 proved to be true to name with no off type plants. Sixteen samples were off-type only in the slightly greater length of vine, while the production and character of the pods would admit them for canning purposes; 67 samples showed less than 10 plants per rod of row of off-type peas and vines. Of the remainder there were 51 samples which showed from 10 to 25 plants per rod having long vines not characteristic of the Alaska variety. The samples which had more than 25 plants per rod of long vines numbered 39, while 35 samples were either not Alaskas or were so-called "wild Alaskas" or field peas. Of all the 219 samples, 4.6 per cent were high-grade Alaskas, 7.4 per cent showed only off-type vines, and 31.1 per cent had less than 10 plants per rod off type in character. Of these samples, 94 could be used for canning purposes, but 125 were such decided departures that they could not be successfully handled in commercial plantings.

Results of 1923 Tests.

The results of the tests in 1923 paralleled those of 1922 and it is believed these tests give a good index of the character of the seed being offered to the trade by many seedsmen. The requirements of the commercial growers are very much more exacting than those of the market gardener or home gardener. The planting of extensive acreages of spurious or off-type Alaska peas has resulted in great losses in the eastern part of the canning area. In some cases the pack has been absolutely ruined by the presence of a small percentage of Bangalins, which discolor the liquid in the cans.

The only insurance against such losses is high-grade seed true to varietal type.

Eradication of Cattle Tuberculosis Costs Less

In the eradication of cattle tuberculosis it is now possible to get better use out of the money expended than ever before, according to the experience of the veterinarians carrying on the campaign for the United States Department of Agriculture. During the past year the average cost per head of testing cattle under government supervision was 35 cents, a reduction of 11 cents from the figure of the preceding year. This reduction, which was brought about largely through the spread of the area testing plan, makes it possible to advance much more rapidly with the eradication work. Most of the areas in which all of the cattle have been tested at one time are counties, and counties free of cattle tuberculosis may now be found in nearly all parts of the country from the Atlantic to the Pacific to the Gulf. Every one of the four corners of the country has at least one free county or one in which a campaign is now being carried on. Up near the extremity of Maine is Piscataquis county; in southwestern Arizona is Maricopa county; Island county, Wash., is free; and work is just starting to make the final clean-up in Dade county, Fla.

Planted in Spring Hairy Vetch Acts as Biennial

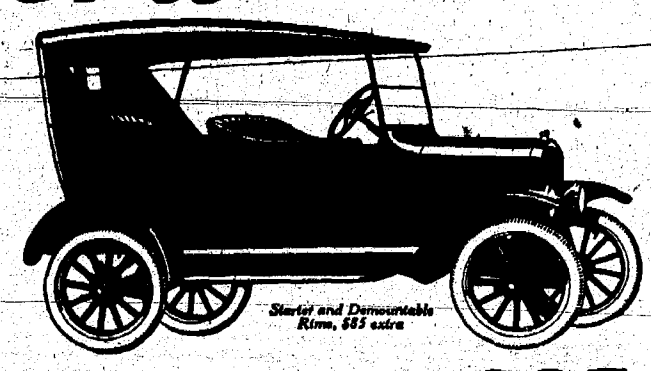

Winter vetch is a name sometimes applied by American seedsmen to hairy vetch. The term winter vetch, however, should not be applied to hairy vetch, as it is properly applied to the winter strains of common vetch.

If planted in the spring hairy vetch acts as a biennial and does not mature seed the first season. If the crop is to be kept on the land two seasons spring seeding is advised in the northern states. From 20 to 25 pounds to the acre is a heavy seeding. As a rule only 3 to 5 bushels of seed to the acre are secured, though occasionally yields as high as 10 to 11 bushels have been reported.

Hogging Down Soy Beans

In recent years there has been quite an increase in the acreage of soy beans for hay, for seed, and for hogging down purposes. It is grown much more extensively for hogging down purposes than for hay or grain, but its popularity as a hay plant is increasing as farmers become better acquainted with it.

BE PRETTY! TURN GRAY HAIR DARK

Try Grandmother's Old Favorite Recipe of Sage Tea and Sulphur

Almost everyone knows that Sage Tea and Sulphur, properly compounded, brings back the natural color and lustre to the hair when faded, streaked or gray. Years ago the only way to get this mixture was to make it at home, which is mussy and troublesome. Nowadays, by asking at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," you will get a large bottle of this famous old recipe, improved by the addition of other ingredients, at a small cost.

Don't stay gray! Try it! No one can possibly tell that you darkened your hair, as it does it so naturally and evenly. You dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair disappears, and after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully dark, glossy and attractive.

THE DANCE

By THOMAS A. CLARK

Dean of Men, University of Illinois.

ROGERS is a friend of mine who often, to relieve his feelings, tells me his troubles. He has a pleasant, agreeable wife, though of course neither of them is under twenty-one. He has kept his interest in society and he and Mrs. Rogers occasionally are invited out to chaperon a party of young people at a local club. He wasn't exactly sore when he related to me his last experience, for he has a sense of humor, but he was just a little disappointed and hurt. This is how he told it to me:

One of his young acquaintances breezed into his office one day last spring and said, "We're going to have a dance at the club Friday night; can't you and Mrs. Rogers come over?"

"I'll ask her," he replied. He did, and although she wasn't very well, she consented to go to please him, and he sent word to the fellows that they would be there.

When they got to the house on the evening of the dance things were in progress. They were recognized by some of the fellows, one of whom went with them to the dressing room. Later they found their way downstairs and sat in a cold, dark corner, as it seemed they were expected to do.

The dancing went on quite as if they were not there—quite proper dancing in the main. Few of the fellows spoke to them, and fewer still introduced the young women whom they had with them. Most of the boys with whom they were unacquainted looked at them as though they were strangers and some of the older men even stared at them as they passed by, but gave no signs of recognition. Nobody asked them, though they both enjoy dancing, to dance, and between dances the room in which they were sitting was pretty well deserted except for their presence.

As time went on it appeared that there was punch or cakes or sandwiches being served somewhere in the house, but no one offered to serve them, and as they were not quite famished they did not go on an exploring expedition themselves.

About eleven o'clock Mrs. Rogers decided that she would be more comfortable at home, and just as likely there to meet new acquaintances as where she was, so they announced their departure to one of the fellows and threaded their way alone through the dancers to the dressing room.

"I hope you've enjoyed the dance," one of the fellows shouted as they were pushing their way out.

"It was wonderful," Rogers responded, "and Mrs. Rogers is going to be just crazy to come to the next one."

"Don't they know any better?" Mrs. Rogers asked, as she was warming her feet before her own pleasant grate fire, "or do they just think we don't?"

Very Likely.

There are more fractions in the arithmetic class at school than the 100,000,000 people in the United States ever use afterward.

SENATE PROBERS NOW HIT MELLON

TREASURY DEPARTMENT CHIEF ACCUSED OF HOLDING OFFICE ILLEGALLY.

DAUGHERTY QUITS ON REQUEST

Attorney-General Hands Resignation to President—Has Been Storm Center for Three Years.

Washington—Immediately following the resignation of Attorney-General Harry M. Daugherty, the senate investigating committee has launched an attack on Andrew W. Mellon, Secretary of the Treasury, in an attempt to force his retirement.

A resolution has been introduced by Senator Kenneth McKellar, (Dem.) Tennessee, which calls for an inquiry to determine whether the Secretary "is directly or indirectly concerned to carry on the business of trade or commerce," whether he owns any sea vessel "in whole or in part," and whether he is holding office in violation of statutes cited which prohibit maintenance of commercial connections by the Government's fiscal agents.

Harry M. Daugherty passed out of public life in a tempest that terminated characteristically his three stormy years as Attorney-General. His appointment to the Cabinet by President Harding was the subject of criticism, and his resignation came at the virtual demand of Mr Coolidge and in the midst of a sensation-producing Senate investigation of his official acts.

Mr. Coolidge asked his resignation because he felt he could not depend on Mr. Daugherty for disinterested advice, and because he believed the Attorney-General could not perform satisfactorily the duties of his office under conditions resulting from the Senate inquiry.

Mr. Daugherty tendered his resignation " solely out of deference" to the President's request and asked that it be effective at once.

SPRING STORMS SWEEP NATION

Upwards of 30 Lives Lost In Wake of Wind and Floods.

Chicago—Sweeping eastward from the Rockies, terrific spring storms have taken a tremendous toll of life and property throughout the entire central section of the United States. In the path of the storms, eastern rivers swelled past the flood stage with lives lost and much property damage reported. Upwards of 30 persons were drowned, crushed in falling houses or otherwise killed in the fury of the elements.

Blizzards and hail storms whipped by a 60-mile gale gripped the northwestern part of Michigan. Ice coated and dismantled wires demoralized telephone and telegraph service in many towns.

Rail traffic in Minnesota was paralyzed by an unusual snowfall, thousands of miles of wire went down under the lash of sleet; river shipping on the Mississippi and Ohio rivers was entirely tied up. So violent was the storm in southwest Missouri that houses were whirled into the air and fell with their human occupants crushed within them.

In the east, floods swept Cumberland, Md., and townships in the vicinity of Johnstown, Pa., scene of the historic flood nearly two decades ago. The Potomac river overflowed its banks, inundating the business section of Cumberland, and covering railroad bridges at several points.

TWO DROWN UNDER UPSET AUTO

Car Skids Into Ditch, Turns Over—Occupants Pinned Beneath.

Detroit—Pinned under an automobile which had overturned in a water-filled ditch on Seven-Mile road, the bodies of Robert L. Linder, 30 years old, and Frederick S. Allen, 31 years old, both Detroiters, were found by a passing motorist. Death was caused by drowning.

From marks in the mud, the car had skidded and turned over. Allen was pinned underneath the water, which was about 18 inches deep, by the steering gear. The seat rested on Linder's chest.

"MACADAM"

Motorists like to strike a road composed of tar-bound macadam. They are indebted to John Loudon Macadam, a Scotch engineer, for this excellent type of road. Macadam is made of crushed stone, taking its name from its discoverer. Coal tar is frequently added to the top layer of stone. The accent is on "ad."

EXAMPLE

By THOMAS A. CLARK
Dean of Men, University of Illinois.

ERICKSON is not particularly well known in his community. He is a quiet fellow who does his work well, who lives a clean, wholesome life, and who thinks of the other fellow quite as seriously as he does of himself.

He came in to see me last spring rather worried about something.

"I haven't done much for the town or in church," he confessed. "Some of the other fellows are out in all sorts of community activities, some of them are real leaders, but I don't seem to amount to much."

I knew that he worked regularly and well, that he was unselfish, that his life was the sort that we should like men to live, and that it would be possible for me to say to any of his friends, "If you'll follow Erickson's example, I shall be satisfied."

There was not a man who knew him who was not made better by watching Bob. There was no one, no matter how indifferent he seemed, who was not influenced by his example, and I told him so. Bob never shirked; he never descended to low, vulgar talk; he did his duty regularly as he saw it, without preaching, and this had its effects.

Murphy was different. He was a loafer, satisfied if he merely got by. He was selfish, thoughtless, and never did any serious, honest work that he could evade. He slept until noon when he had no work to do, and not infrequently when he did have, alleging illness as an excuse. His talk was careless and his ideals flexible.

"I don't hurt anyone but myself," he always protested. But it was not true. Everyone has his influence, and Murphy had his, and it was never good. The fact that he did little work and still kept out of trouble influenced younger fellows to try the same tactics. When he spent his evenings in questionable pleasure, they saw no reason why they should wear themselves out with unnecessary industry. The presence of Murphy lowered the intellectual and moral tone wherever he went.

Most of us preach very well; it is rather expected of us; it's our job, and preaching in a way is not a bad thing. It is example, however, which counts most.
